

Before #TimesUp and #MeToo: Quid Pro Quo and Hostile Work Environment: How Black Women Shaped The Development of Sexual Harassment Law

Before #TimesUp and #MeToo, there was Sandra Bundy and Pamela Price. Theirs was a world before sexual harassment became law. Come hear from the courageous Black women who fought back and the legal theorist who conceptualized how to translate harassment in the workplace into actionable discrimination.

Date: Monday, April 16, 2018

Time: Reception: 6:00 pm – 6:30 pm | Panel: 6:30 pm – 8:30 pm

Location: UCLA School of Law / Room 1347
385 Charles E. Young Drive East, Los Angeles, CA 90095

Panelists: Sandra Bundy, Plaintiff in Bundy v. Jackson (first Federal Appeals Court case to hold that workplace sexual harassment was employment discrimination and a violation of the Civil Rights Act of 1964)

Kimberlé Crenshaw, Distinguished Professor of Law, UCLA School of Law

Catharine MacKinnon, Elizabeth A. Long Professor of Law, The University of Michigan Law School

Pamela Price, Attorney at Law, 2018 Candidate for Alameda County District Attorney, and Plaintiff in Alexander (Price) v. Yale (first case to challenge sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination in education)

Live-stream available at www.bit.ly/beforetimesup

RSVP at: <https://equity.ucla.edu/awareness>

Registration is free and open to all. Light refreshments will be provided.

UCLA Equity, Diversity and Inclusion